* For web design and graphics, Adobe Photoshop is the preferable tool because of its robust features, because it can be applied to the online arena as well as printed media. Photoshop uses a workspace that enables users to layer images and tools on top of one another. Once a photo is complete and in its final form, it can be sent directly to the Web. Many individuals and companies have a family member or friend who has Adobe Photoshop or similar image-editing software on their computer. Photographers who work for professional organizations or businesses also have these editing programs on their computer workstations. In this case, the editing software is used professionally and the user often edits many different images simultaneously. The Editor's Basics The steps to create a photograph are divided into creation and then manipulation. Once an image is created, it can be processed and placed on the Web. * Creation: The steps in creating a photo are beginning, shutter speed, aperture, ISO, and white balance, and in its creation stage, an image is just a photograph. * Manipulation: Once an image is created, it can be manipulated using a number of different techniques and tools. You can distort, crop, color, and layer images, plus you can produce special effects. The following steps explain the process to a beginner using Photoshop. Step 1: Open the image Image © Don McCulloch The first step in creating a photograph is to open the image that you want to capture. Step 2: Enhance the background This image contains a white background with simple pattern. At this point, a new layer is created and the background is treated like a layer. You can see that a background has been selected. You can make this layer a permanent layer by clicking Layer from the Layers panel. The background layer is retained as a backup and is not affected by any of the later steps in the process. * If the background is solid, it's OK to leave the background as-is and proceed to Step 3. * If the background is complicated, you can keep the background information and hide it. For example, in this photo, when the camera's flash was used to illuminate the subject, a large white light illuminated the background, which presented a difficult image to capture. Since the background was illuminated by the flash, it should be retained. To do this, select the layer, open the Layer menu,

Criticism has been growing around the entire Democratic National Committee (DNC) after WikiLeaks' release of leaked e-mails from its servers, particularly on top Democratic Party officials such as DNC Chairman Debbie Wasserman Schultz and Democratic National Committee staff members Robby Mook and research director Luis Miranda. The leaked e-mails reveal that party officials favored Hillary Clinton over Bernie Sanders in the Democratic primaries and they show top-level DNC officials and aides actively blocking other websites, such as liberal media outlets, from being seen by Sanders supporters. One leaked e-mail reveals top Democratic Party officials working with the media to ensure that certain issues did not get too many mentions on MSNBC, the top-rated cable news network during the 2016 presidential campaign. "To pre-emptively make sure we aren't playing into [Bernie Sanders'] hands," the Democratic Party officials wrote in a March 20, 2016 e-mail, "please don't book Bernie on for tomorrow." "I just got off the phone with [MSNBC] — they were looking for someone who could get them more Bernie," DNC staffer Alexandra Chalupa responded. "[MSNBC] has not asked about any Dem [Democratic Party] candidate." According to Politico's story, the story was later told to MSNBC's Aaron Katersky, in which DNC staffers explained why Sanders could not be booked in the future. "We are not saying that you shouldn't book Bernie — obviously he's your guy — [but] he cannot be booked on any shows for the next week," DNC staffer Christian Morais wrote. "He's just been hammered for the past 24 hours… I'm also working on some other shows for Bernie, but it's not a great use of our team resources." Several other e-mails reveal the party conspiring with mainstream media outlets to favor Clinton and downplay Sanders. For example, a Feb. 1, 2016 e-mail reveals Clinton allies David Brock and Rev. Al Sharpton sending a letter to the DNC demanding that Clinton be featured more in the media. "[T]his is a real opportunity to shine some spotlight on Hillary Clinton, given the foundation has just announced a major new initiative on generational change," Brock and Sharpton wrote. "We understand that you are conducting
