>>Gameplay feels fantastic. The controls are very tight and can be set to feel more complex or simple. In battle, I believe the controller or fighting style will determine the order you move or what arm moves for the special moves. >>One thing that is lacking in the game is the introduction of other characters and an easier way of joining a game besides just buying it. It is extremely easy to join a game but to level characters which cost money is something that needs to be made more user friendly or at least more easily accessible. >>The game features 3 maps, each with their own special moves along with their own story and ending. >>The graphics are very well done. The enemies, weapons, the player and environment are all wonderfully detailed. >>The music in the game is much deeper and more complex than the standard nostalgic music that you find in most SNES games. >>The sound effects are top notch. When selecting your character, the sound is the opponent's punch or kick. When selecting weapons, you hear the attack sound. When you are hit, you hear a good solid groan or other sound. The camera sound is a definite "man down" or "crunch" sound. When you use your special move it makes the sound of a "pop" or crackle that is very realistic. Best sound in a game I've played in years. >>The game includes 3 multi-player modes. The Adventure Mode is a story mode, similar to things you could find in Castlevania games. The Battle Mode is similar to the fighter arcade games of the 90's. The third game mode, "Swarmer Training", is the training mode that allows you to practice and perfect your special moves and weapon attacks. The modes and difficulty settings are very well done. >>Action Gameplay: >>The levels are very well designed. The enemy AI is very well done and ranges from very difficult (can be one tough SOB) to simple. The weapons in the game are very good and offer a wide range of techniques. >>The special moves are very well done. The sword is very fun to use and doing really crazy combos. The whip is very fun and provides a nice touch of replay value. >>The camera moves and camera angle are very well done and can be altered to your liking. I do not recommend the PC version of the game. >>The Game supports co-op and you do not need to have the same controller as your friend. There is no

G The best tandem light in this price range. In my opinion they are a little lesser in quality compared to Remi's (e.g., dimmer switching, matte finish, and no engraved barrel threads) but the price is almost perfectly balanced. MP Fugu April 6, 2014, 01:39 PM I'm not sure which link I will add you to....but you are soooo right. That review was mostly stating how it was better than the Remi's I tried. I have tried 5 or more of the Remis and only 1 of them had a unique feature that the Tiger Tanks had. The MP Fugu's are perfect, even with that little flaw that 5 out of 6 did not have. giuses April 6, 2014, 01:45 PM Is there even a link to all this? I'm just curious, because the review isn't too many to read if you're doing it piecemeal americanvietnamveteran April 6, 2014, 01:47 PM This is what happened when I 'discovered' the MP's: Giuse: Look at all that! This is us without any flash except for a clone pistol... I love flash : 3 Back to my focal length/speed combo: In 1/1000s, at 11m I could clearly see the reflections on his 24-135 set, and in 1/500s he was just a dark speck with a tiny cross. I couldn't put my CG anywhere on him. In 1/200s I could tell if he was facing the right direction. The light to me was not a pain, and a very nice compliment as well, and I could see my front and back wheel. Of course, the motor was quiet. 1/50 was too slow for this. But still, I sold most of his gear and stayed with my 300-600 at 11m. It takes a lot of light to be nice. I might have seen my Saturn Nights perfectly in low light as well, I'm just not enough of a light buff. sj April 6, 2014, 02:53 PM :3... are you going to be getting a headlamp then?
