Open-label, uncontrolled, pilot study of ketamine in major depression. Several studies have been carried out with ketamine, a novel, noncompetitive N-methyl-D-aspartate antagonist in the treatment of intractable depression. We evaluated the safety and efficacy of a single intravenous dose of the racemic ketamine enantiomer for the treatment of depressive disorders. A naturalistic, open-label, uncontrolled, prospective, pilot trial included 20 outpatients meeting DSM-IV criteria for major depressive disorder. Ten received 2.5 mg/kg (maximum dose 120 mg) racemic ketamine and 10 received 1.5 mg/kg (maximum dose 60 mg) enantiomeric ketamine. Serum human growth hormone (GH) and prolactin (PRL) levels were measured and patients were assessed at baseline and at 1, 6, 12, and 24 h post-dosing by means of the Hamilton Depression Rating Scale (HAMD) and the Hamilton Anxiety Rating Scale (HAM-A). Significant mean reductions of approximately 35% in HAMD and 25% in HAM-A scores from baseline to 24 h were observed in patients receiving ketamine. A significant mean increase in GH (7 ng/ml) but not PRL (11 ng/ml) levels was observed 12 h after ketamine administration. One patient receiving racemic ketamine developed a seizure shortly after dosing. The results of this open-label, uncontrolled pilot study suggest that ketamine is well-tolerated by most patients, with a single dose significantly reducing severity of depressive symptoms.

It holds that the denial of a defendant's motions for a downward departure may be appealed by the defendant or by the Government, but not by the district court. The applicability of the first appeal waiver to Delatorre's appeal depends on this issue. If Delatorre was not entitled to a downward departure, then his appeal waiver is valid and we need not review the district court's decision not to depart downward. On the other hand, if the Government is barred from appealing, there is no reason why we should be able to review the district court's ruling on the downward departure motion. In other words, there is a dilemma. 13 The Government argues that we lack jurisdiction because Delatorre's appeal is procedurally barred. We consider a question of procedural bar de novo, subject to the constraints of the law of the circuit. See, e.g., *United States v.
